

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Systematic chemical analysis of glycosphingolipid (GSL) fractions from large quantities of normal human neutrophils and HL60 cells failed to detect GSL's which are binding targets of selectin. A series of long-chain, unbranched polylactosamine GSL's with a terminally sialylated, internally polyfucosylated structure bind selectins.